The method used is descriptive and verification method, with data collection techniques namely documentation studies and library studies. The design of hypothesis testing uses simple linear regression analysis, Pearson correlation, coefficient of determination, and testing the test hypothesis t.

The calculation results from the descriptive analysis show that Brand Awareness is in a good category while the Decision Purchases are in a fairly good category and Pearson correlation is 0.787 which indicates that the correlation between Brand Awareness and Purchase Decision is in a strong relationship, the coefficient of determination is 60.2% Brand Awareness has a contribution of 60.2% to Purchase Decision, the rest, which is 39.8%, is influenced by other variables not examined, for example perceived quality and brand association. The result of the analysis of hypothesis testing is that there is a positive influence between Brand Awareness of Purchase Decision.
